CLERKENWELL
DESIGN WEEK

David Hughes, one of the UK's leading LEGO Artists, is very excited to be showcasing a selection of his work as part of Clerkenwell Design Week 2017.

David uses the humble, basic, recognisable LEGO brick and through his careful and meticulous designs he creates colourful, fun and beautiful mosaics and sculptures. His work engages with people because it appeals to all of us who played with LEGO as children whilst, at the same time, exploring grown-up ideas of contemporary design.

His LEGO Art is something different. Unusual, and at the same time accessible, with classic cultural icons reimagined in bricks, portraits and bright, graphic based images from architecture, design and popular culture. His sculptures push the limits of what LEGO can be, using the hard, orthogonal, plastic bricks to create impossibly graceful and beautiful sculptures.

Clerkenwell Design Week also gives David the opportunity to highlight his commission services; designing and building one-off bespoke LEGO Art installations for a wide range of commercial and domestic clients.

David is a qualified architect who has worked on projects ranging from the Geffrye Museum Extension with Branson Coates to Park Theatre in Finsbury Park with David Hughes Architects. He has combined his architectural experience and passion for contemporary design with his childhood love of LEGO to create unique and beautiful LEGO Art that takes the humble brick to a whole new level.
